What is toncoin (TON)?

“A native token of The Open Network (TON), which began as Telegram's original blockchain project called Telegram Open Network.”

Its independent blockchain, Layer 1, was developed in 2018 by developers at Telegram, the encrypted messaging company. Later, Telegram gave up the project for some known reasons, and an open-source community then continued to maintain the network with some upgrades before renaming the project to The Open Network in 2022.

It became a multi-chain project, which means that different blockchains are issued to increase the overall scalability of the project while maintaining its security too. According to some independent crypto analysts, Toncoin (TON) currently ranks 10 among all known cryptocurrency assets.

Below is a list of the main uses of Toncoin:

- It is used for network operations, transactions, games, or collectibles built on TON.
- It aims to facilitate swift payment settlements, easy-to-use decentralized applications, and low transaction fees.
- It delivers near-instantaneous speed and scale to millions per second, prioritizing security and scalability.

The network is open source, and the TON community is actively creating new use cases. <https://www.benzinga.com/money/what-is-toncoin-ton>

TON also serves as a governance token for the FreeTON network, meaning TON crypto holders can suggest and vote on governance proposals that impact the project's development trajectory.
